

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates generally to temperature recording systems used in the monitoring of a large group of animals. In particular, the present invention relates to the general maintenance of a herd of dairy cows. The present invention eliminates many of the 5 problems associated with the maintenance of dairy cows by providing a more efficient method of monitoring a dairy cow's body core temperature and by providing a more efficient way of locating a particular dairy cow.